IBA-PREP Vocabulary Challenge – 01: Word Smart (Lectures 1–10)

Marks: 30 Time: 30 Minutes

Read the following story.

The final semester at the university always feels different. Everyone talks about graduation, jobs, and the future. Rafi and Nabila also stood at the same point in life. They were classmates, good friends, and two young people with one common dream - to build a better future for themselves and their families.

Neither of them came from an affluent family. Every afternoon, they taught private tuition to pay their own expenses. At night, they studied for the IBA MBA admission test and different job examinations. Life was often adverse, but they believed that education could ameliorate their future.

Every evening they met at the university library. The ambience was calm. They prepared a study agenda and started reading with great alacrity. Rafi was very good at Mathematics. Nabila had excellent English aptitude. They shared notes, explained difficult topics, and celebrated every small improvement together.

One day, Rafi closed his vocabulary notebook and said, "I really abhor these difficult words."

Nabila smiled.

"Are you attending Choity Apu's vocabulary classes regularly?" she asked.

"Yes, I am," Rafi replied.

"Then don't worry," Nabila said. "If you attend the classes regularly and revise every lesson, vocabulary will become easier day by day. It happened to me too."

Rafi smiled.

"You are right. A few weeks ago many words looked impossible. Now I understand them much better."

Their English teacher was always affable and amicable. He never made students feel small. Instead, he addressed every question with patience. Sometimes he admonished them for wasting time, but every student knew that he cared about their future.

One afternoon, he shared an inspiring anecdote about a former student who had failed several admission tests before becoming successful. The story helped alleviate the worries of the whole class.

Outside the classroom, many people said that getting into IBA was only for extraordinary students. Rafi and Nabila did not acquiesce to those opinions. They remained adamant. Every practice test, every mistake, and even every abortive attempt taught them something new.

Before every mock examination, Rafi became apprehensive. Nabila always tried to appease him.

She said, "One poor result is only an anomaly. It does not decide your future."

Rafi had strong mathematical acumen, while Nabila was adroit at solving English questions. They never felt animosity toward each other. Instead, they believed in altruism. Whenever one of them learned something new, the other learned it too. Their teacher often reminded the class, "Success does not need adulation. It needs discipline." Every student gave him heartfelt accolade, because his words gave them confidence instead of fear.

The admission test finally arrived. When the exam was over, both of them felt uncertain. They discussed every question while walking past TSC. Neither of them could guess the final result.

A few days later, the result was published. Rafi looked at his phone again and again. Then he called Nabila.

His voice was shaking. "I got selected for the IBA MBA program."

For a few seconds, Nabila did not say anything.

Then she laughed.

"I also got selected for the IBA MBA program."

Both of them thanked Allah.

After a short silence, Rafi said,

"Nabila, thank you. It was your suggestion that made me join the IBA-MBA Preparation for Beginners course."

Nabila smiled.

"I am really happy that you joined. The regular classes, vocabulary sessions, mock tests, and continuous practice helped both of us a lot."

Rafi nodded.

"Please convey our sincere thanks to all the brothers and sisters who taught us. Their effort, encouragement, and guidance made this journey easier. It was really a very inspiring and helpful journey."

Nabila replied, "Yes. They always believed in us before we believed in ourselves."

They looked at each other and smiled.

They remembered the crowded buses, the late-night study sessions, the tuition classes, the evenings at the library, the difficult days, and the dream that never left them.

That day, they understood one simple truth.

Dreams do not come true because life is easy.

Dreams come true because people refuse to stop trying.
